A lecture by Sir Partha Dasgupta,
Frank Ramsey Professor of Economics,
Cambridge University

the Idea of Social Capital

The lecture will explain the concept of social capital and its relation to environmental capital, and will critically evaluate the way it has been applied by enthusiasts. It will also explore how the idea helps us to understand the performance of modern economies.

Partha Dasgupta has made many outstanding contributions to environmental and resource economics. These include his decisive work on the economics of exhaustible resources, his insights on their role in providing essential ecological services, and his pioneering efforts to better understand the processes of underdevelopment and poverty and their connections to the environment. His seminal contributions have been of enormous consequence for understanding the relationships between development, environment and poverty and have translated into significant policy advances.

The Sibthorp Trust was set up as a result of a generous bequest in the will of Miss Mary Sibthorp in 1991 and is managed by a Board of Trustees.

Mary Sibthorp was a remarkable woman. She was Director of the David Davies Memorial Institute of International Studies and was greatly concerned with the wise use of natural resources and their international dimensions. A specific aim of the Trust is to promote the study and discussion of key environmental issues and to publish the results of such activities as the 'Sibthorp Papers'.

The Royal Holloway Institute for Environmental Research (RHIER) provides the secretariat for the Trust. Visit www.sibthorp.org.uk for more information about the Sibthorp Trust.
